Everything was Quiet about the Works Yesterday.

THE POTS FILLED IN YESTERDAY.

The Managers do not Fear Trouble, but are Prepared for it if it should Occur—No Repetition of the Laughlin Mill Riot Wanted at Martin's Ferry—It is Thought there will be no Want of Boys.

The pots were filled in the middle furnace at the Buckeye Glass Works yesterday morning. The glass will be tried to-day and eight shops will be started on Monday morning. The furnace was fired up last week and was in excellent shape when the filling in took place yesterday. The management say everything is moving along nicely and while they do not fear trouble, they are prepared for it and the works and men will be protected by the guards. These, it is understood, are armed to the teeth, and Winchester and revolvers are plentiful in the works. From what can be learned every non-union man who has arrived came prepared to protect himself. It is generally hoped that no bloodshed will occur. Martin's Ferry had a taste of that when the Laughlin Mill Works was attacked and a large number of those who fired upon the works were shot, and the town does not want to see a repetition of that awful affair.

It has been claimed that the Buckeye people could not get boys to work in the factory, but they say that this is a mistake and that they can get plenty of them and will have a sufficient number. The improvements made in the factory will lessen the number of boys needed. The management claim that they are receiving applications every day for work in about all of the departments and that they will have plenty of good efficient people. Some of the old employees are already at work and others will be taken back as fast as they are needed. Many of the old employees were in no way connected with trade unions and several of these say they are simply taking their own jobs and that it is proper for them to return to work.

One of the Pittsburghers who started with the party for Martin's Ferry and failed to appear in Wheeling, as stated in the INTELLIGENCER, walked into the works yesterday without molestation. One of the officials was asked how the man reached the works, and he answered, "I guess it was by the balloon route."

Few persons excepting the employees are admitted to the works, and all of these through one door, which is kept locked when not in use. Many strangers are looked upon with suspicion, and the company are watching the movements of the local glassworkers, and they are keeping a watchful eye on the glass works people.

"Shore Acres" To-night.

James A. Herne's great drama, "Shore Acres," will be presented at the Opera House for the first time in Wheeling. Few plays in recent years have caused as great a sensation as this among the ranks of theatre-goers. The New York Herald said of it once: "If Charles Dickens had had as much talent as he certainly had affection for the stage, he would, I imagine, have written just such a play as 'Shore Acres.'"

The New York Mercury said: "Once in a decade a marvellous play is born, and when such a play is seen all our playwrights set to work to model on similar lines. Such a play has been delivered and such an opportunity is now at hand in 'Shore Acres' by James A. Herne." Nobody ought to miss the opportunity to see the play.
